Tunis is Mad Tonight is the extraordinary biography of New Zealand journalist Douglas Brass. You may not have heard of him, but after reading this book you will find his remarkable 40-year career fascinating. He reported on significant world events – World War II and post-war Europe. He established himself as a well-respected royal correspondent, and later, his robust columns were highly influential in opposing Australia's participation in the Vietnam War after he played a significant role in establishing The Australian.

Though he was a prominent journalist, he was also very private and reserved. This is the first time there has been a significant biography. Written by a family member with access to records and other information, this is a well-written account that brings Douglas Brass to life. And what a life, reporting on events from the most turbulent eras in world history!

Tunis is Mad Tonight is highly readable, and author Peter Cox reveals a man who loved his home and family but was never backward in criticising anything that wasn't right. The book also brings to life the era he lived through.
